Misconduct
in continuous and final assessment activities

Misconduct

Consequences

Copying or plagiarism, for example:
- Failing to cite (or citing inadequately) the author or source of information.
- Excessive paraphrasing, despite citing correctly.
- Copying and pasting content from other sources.
- Submitting someone else's work as if it was your own.
- Doing an assessment activity with someone else when the course plan says it is to be done individually.

Depending on the seriousness:

Failing the activity

Failing the continuous assessment

Failing the course

Opening disciplinary proceedings

Using unauthorized material, software or devices:
- Using UOC learning resources, notes, work done by yourself or fellow students, web pages or other tools or software to do an assessment activity when this has not been expressly authorized in the course plan.
- Using unauthorized external devices, for instance a mobile phone, tablet, laptop or headphones, to do an assessment activity.

Colluding in, covering up or abetting copying (in exchange for something or not):
- Providing another student with a completed assessment activity, or giving them access to it.
- Making an assessment activity available online (e.g. in a WhatsApp or Telegram group) before the deadline specified in the course plan.
- Offering to provide people with completed assessment activities.
- Selling assessment activities.

Obtaining or accepting assessment activities (in exchange for something or not):
- Buying an assessment activity on a website or online platform.
- Tasking someone with doing an assessment activity.
- Accepting an assessment activity done by someone else.

Opening disciplinary proceedings

Identity fraud:
- Submitting a false identity document (e.g. passport or national ID card).
- Anyone else pretending to be the student or using the student's name, surname or anything else that could serve for identification purposes.

You can find more information about academic integrity and plagiarism on the UOC's website on the subject.